WORKSHEET A

The UK is going to have a royal wedding in Westminster Abbey on April 29th, 2011, after Prince William (a grandson of the British monarch, Queen Elizabeth II) and his girlfriend, Kate Middleton, announced on November 16th that they had gotten engaged.

The announcement was big news, not only in the UK — where it immediately became the main story on the TV news, and was on the front pages of all the newspapers the next day — but also abroad. The wedding, which will take place in London in the spring or summer, is sure to be live on TV in many countries.

Prince William is the eldest child of Prince Charles, 62, and Princess Diana, who died in a car accident in Paris in 1997. As the eldest child of the Queen, who is now 84, Charles is first in line to become the British monarch after her, and William, 28, is second. William will therefore probably be king one day — and his fiancée, also 28, will probably be queen.

However, it seems the name Kate (short for Catherine) might be too informal for a future queen: a few hours after the engagement announcement, some journalists were already calling her Catherine.

Kate (or Catherine) is different from almost every other person who has ever married someone from the British royal family, as she is not from the aristocracy herself. Her parents are middle class (although they did become rich after starting a business) and did not have any connections with the royal family until their daughter and William became very close.

Kate and William met in 2001 when they were studying art history in the same college in Scotland. They recently started living together in a house in Wales, where William is working as a helicopter pilot with the British air force, and will probably continue living there after the wedding.

Millions of royal wedding souvenirs will be sold in the UK in the months before and after the big day, just as in 1981 when William's parents, Charles and Diana, got married. In fact, "Kate and William" mugs and T-shirts are already on sale.

Also, some British people have already started betting on which country the couple will go to on their honeymoon: the favorite so far is Kenya.
