Slang

A conversation in London between Mark, a British man, and Karolina, from the Czech Republic:

|           |  |
|-----------|--|
| Mark:     | How's the job going?   |
| Karolina: | At the restaurant?   |
| Mark:     | Yeah.  |
| Karolina: | It's OK. The staff are from lots of different countries and I'm the only Czech – so I have to speak English all the time, which is very good practice for me. The money's OK but the hours are long. It's knackered sometimes. |
| Mark:     | Ha! Where did you learn that?  |
| Karolina: | What?  |
| Mark:     | 'Knackered'?   |
| Karolina: | One of the waitresses says it all the time. Is it wrong?   |
| Mark:     | No, but it's slang. It's funny – I don't expect to hear a foreigner use a word like that.  |
| Karolina: | So, to say 'I'm knackered' is also slang?  |
| Mark:     | Yeah. But they're words lots of people use, when they're not in formal situations, so it's good to know them. Hey, how much other slang do you know?   |
| Karolina: | Er ...   |
| Mark:     | I'll test you. What does 'wicked' mean?  |
| Karolina: | Oh, that's too easy. 'Wicked' means very good.   |
| Mark:     | OK, something harder ... What about 'dodgy'?   |
| Karolina: | 'Dodgy' is not good. You can say someone you can't trust is dodgy. Or something that doesn't work like it should.  |
| Mark:     | Right again. What's it mean if someone is 'minted'?  |
| Karolina: | Er ...   |
| Mark:     | It's the same as 'loaded'.   |
| Karolina: | Ah yes – I think it means they are very rich.  |
| Mark:     | You're good! What about 'gobsmacked'?  |
| Karolina: | Gob what?  |
| Mark:     | Gobsmacked. Like 'I was gobsmacked when she told me'.  |
| Karolina: | No idea.   |
| Mark:     | It means very surprised. How about 'zilch'?  |
| Karolina: | No.  |
| Mark:     | It means zero, or nothing. But maybe that's not fair – it's more American than British.  |
| Karolina: | You know, there's an Australian chef at work, and he was teaching me Australian slang. So maybe I can test you?  |
| Mark:     | I'm sure I've heard it before. Let me guess. Barbie? Tucker?   |
| Karolina: | Yes. And 'chook'.  |
| Mark:     | And what?  |
| Karolina: | Chook. What's a chook?   |
| Mark:     | I don't know.  |
| Karolina: | A chicken. You see, I've taught you a word in your own language!   |
